

Subject: My stomach was in knots...

Hey FIRSTNAME, Dave here from LL Promotions. While never having kids of my own, I got a taste of what it must be like after babysitting my two nieces...

Everything was going well until that one night 17-year old Kim drove her younger sister Kathy to a cheer leading practice session.

They were less than 10 minutes away and should have been on their way back by 9:00 PM. So there I was casually waiting for them to return home.

I glanced up at the clock and noticed it was 9:15 - 5 minutes late, then 10, and 20 and then...

I started to get that sick feeling that something bad had happened. And the girls were not answering my calls to their cell phone.

Have they been robbed, kidnapped, or something even worse?

Just as I was about to panic and start making some calls of desperation, the door swings opens and the two happy girls entered.

"Oh, we stopped to get something to eat", Kim said.

All my tension suddenly melted away...

It reminds me of alternating feelings of distress and delight I used to have while monitoring my investment returns.

During the market dips, all the worst case outcomes imaginable would dominate my thoughts. It seemed like the portfolio was sinking non-stop, day after day.

And then there were the good streaks, when euphoria set in and all fear of loss was gone.

Hey, I am a market genius!

That is, until the market turned again and the vicious cycle repeated.

All along I was thinking, "There has got be a better way!"

A reliable method of growing your portfolio at a steady, sustainable rate.

That would have minimal risk to the down side.
